

One of my lifelong passions has been helping the disabled children, and adults be all they can be.

I have two disabled children I feel so blessed they came in to my life. They taught me to be who I am today. I then went into teaching special needs preschool for twenty five years. I felt I would sooth parents that had small children that had to get special help by telling them I knew what they were going through.

Now I am retired after twenty five years of teaching but far from through. I am seventy two years young but I still mentor new parents who do not know what the future holds for their family. I also just became a Special Olympic coach for the I.E. There goal states in their games let me win but if I do not win let me be brave in the attempt. I have adopted this goal for my own life also. This is why I feel I am a trail blazer at this time.

Debbi Vance